

Sample Credit Card Authorization Form

When given a choice, 75 percent of people prefer to make payments with a credit or debit card, according to a 2016 study by TSYS. Whether you already accept credit card payments from clients or you're considering it, you'll want to take steps to protect your firm against payment disputes. In particular, there are three simple measures you can take to place yourself in a strong position if you're ever faced with a dispute.

First, we recommend that you ask clients to initial any sections in your engagement letter or fee schedule that describe your return policy or the terms and conditions of client payment. Second, you should be able to show proof that your services were delivered. This means sending detailed invoices that clearly document the work you've done for your clients.

Third, you can add a credit card authorization form to your client intake paperwork. This form lets you collect client card information and consent to authorize either a one-time payment or recurring payments. We've created the attached sample forms to help you get started and set you up for success.
